Claim 1 is objected to. The wording "putting up the radiator" is awkward and should be rephrased (e.g. "for spacing the radiator from the bottom part").

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1 and 2 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Dahlgren.

Dahlgren shows a rectangular container lid that is readable on the claimed shield body. It has a flat wall 21 readable on the "bottom part", inwardly projecting fulcrum lugs 28 readable on the "support unit", that limit insertion of the complementarily shaped rectangular lower box 11, and four lateral walls 23, 24, 25. The recitations in claim 1 concerning the heat transfer medium, the radiator, etc., concern the intended use of the device and carry no weight as positive limitations. Applicant is claiming a protective cover per se, not the combination of the cover with the radiator and thermal grease or interface. Thus, it is not necessary for a finding of anticipation that Dahlgren teach what the specification teaches, only that their lid structure "reads on" the structural elements recited in the claim.

Regarding claim 2, note projections 32 and 35 on the lid of Dahlgren.

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

The remaining references show closure/lids for containers similar to Dahlgren, or show protective caps specifically designed and disclosed as usable to protect thermal grease applied to heat sinks.
